SPECIES	DATE	LOCALITY	STATUS	NOTES	SOURCE
Blue Whale Balaenoptera musculus	Last Recorded 1835	Old Den', Spurn (TA4112)	Stranded	A 50 ft calf which stranded at the 'Old Den', Spurn (TA4112) in 1835 was one of the first to be examined scientifically and became a 'type' of its species, known at the time as Sibbald's Rorqual Physalus (Rorqualus) sibbaldii Gray 1847. Its skeleton was exhibited in Hull Museum till 1935 when it was transferred to the Natural History Museum, London	(Spalding 1966, Delany 1985, Howes 1996, 2000)
Sei Whale Balaenoptera borealis	Last recorded 1884-09-05	Goole Docks (SE/7422)	Killed	The only specimen recorded from Yorkshire waters was a calf which entered the Humber and was finally caught and killed in the locks at Goole Docks. The skeleton of the 35ft specimen is now in the Natural History Museum, London	(Spalding 1966, Delany 1985, Howes 1996, 2000).

Sperm Whale Physeter macrocephalus	2006-02-04	Kilnsea (Humber mud) (TA/41)	Stranding	A ten metre long specimen became stranded as the tide receded on the Humber estuary mud off Kilnsea. It was first spotted alive at about 10:00 am blowing in the shallow water. It quickly died as it was left clear of water on the low tide at 3:00 pm. [15 February 2006 another Sperm Whale was spotted near North Shore Road, Skegness (Lincolnshire) during the morning high tide. Paul Jepson (NHM) described it as a quite decomposed 14 metres long male. The Natural History Museum took photos and samples of a further two dead Sperm Whales in the Wash. Thus at least four Sperm Whales have stranded from Yorks to East Anglian in February 2006.]	Daily Telegraph 4.2.2006; Yorkshire Post 6.2.2006; BBC News 16 February 2006.

Harbour Porpoise Phocoena phocoena	2003-04-27	Humber estuary	Stranding	1 fatal stranding. Post mortem showed two linear marks on the dorsal aspect of the tail stock. One of these had a three cornered tear, an injury similar to rakemarks found in harbour porpoises that have been killed as a result of interactions with bottlenose dolphins. In addition, two sets of parallel rakemark like injuries were found on either side of the tail stock. (5 parallel curvilinear rakemarks on the left and 4 on the right). The spacing between these rakemarks was 11mm, the same size as the spacing between bottlenose dolphin teeth (Robert Deavile, Institute of Zoology).	Sue Rhodes BDMLR website
